Brief Report:

Today, the Departments of Botany and Zoology organized an enriching field trip to Banavasi, accompanied by students. The visit provided a valuable opportunity to explore diverse plant-growing techniques, organic farming practices, and various agricultural methods. Students observed cultivation of different plant species, sustainable farming approaches, and the integration of traditional and modern agricultural techniques. The trip offered students practical exposure, allowing them to gain hands-on experience in farming activities, plant identification, and soil management techniques. This experiential learning deepened their understanding of ecological balance, biodiversity conservation, and the importance of organic farming in maintaining soil health and environmental sustainability.
